In its landmark 2014 decision Burwell v. Hobby Lobby, also known as the “Obamacare contraception mandate case,” the Supreme Court ruled that for-profit corporations could refuse to provide their employees with certain forms of contraception required under the Affordable Care Act if the owners of those corporations objected on religious grounds. In observance of Constitution Day 2014, come hear the Top-Ranked Rutgers University Debate Union discuss whether Burwell v. Hobby Lobby was correctly decided. Following the debate, audience members will get to vote on which side presented the more persuasive argument and a panel of Rutgers faculty will share their views.
